

Developing Narratives of Masculinity and Fatherhood

presented by

Jason S. Frishman, PsyD

Jason received a doctorate from William James College (formerly the Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology) where he focused on Narrative and Postmodern therapies. He also obtained his Master's degree from Georgia College and State University for Adventure Therapy. He is currently part of a consensus-based group psychotherapy practice based in Burlington, Vermont and the founder of a community of fathers dedicated to partnership, connection and growth. Jason is excited to bring over two decades of work in offices, schools, camps, institutions, kitchens, farmers' markets, woodlots and boardrooms to wild new environments. Jason believes that our lives are adventurous, and we can and should be active, engaged authors of our own adventure stories! With a passionate focus on supporting men to challenge our cultural narratives of masculinity and fatherhood, Jason helps men to powerfully connect with themselves, one another and the people they purport to love the most - their partners and children!
