

Dysregulation of Positive Emotions in Developmental Psychopathology

presented by

Alecia Vogel-Hammen, MD, PhD

Dr. Alecia Vogel is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Psychiatry at Washington University School of Medicine where she is the director of the Washington University Affective Variability and Excitability (WAVE) Lab and the Assistant Program Director for Research for the Child and Adolescent Psychiatry Fellowship Program. Dr. Vogel received a Ph.D. in Neuroscience as well an MD from Washington University, where she stayed for her adult psychiatry residency and Child and Adolescent Psychiatry Fellowship. After training, Dr. Vogel started her research program understanding the developmental trajectory and neural correlates of emotion dysregulation, particularly dysregulation of positive emotions. She has received several foundation awards to further her research along with two NIMH fellowships. Additionally, she continues to see patients in her emotion dysregulation outpatient clinic and teach medical students, residents and fellows, who have honored her with both teaching and mentoring awards. Outside of work, Dr. Vogel enjoys spending time with her children, enjoying the outdoors, traveling as much as young children will allow, and running slowly.
