

Sgt. Chris Mastroianni has been with the Hartford Police Department for approximately 15 years. Sgt. Mastroianni spent time in the Patrol Division as an Officer before moving to a quality of life conditions team. He was later assigned to a Multi-Jurisdictional Shooting Task Force where he achieved the rank of Detective and later served in the Vice and Narcotics Unit. He currently is the supervisor of HPD's Intelligence Division where he oversees Intelligence Detectives and HPD's Real Time Crime Center, widely known as "C4". Sgt.

Mastroianni runs multiple anti-violence initiatives and has worked on data driven violence problem analyses in Hartford and in several agencies around the country. He has vast experience and knowledge in the world of police technology, its implementation, success, and its effect on crime solvability. He recently started and implemented the department's first drone/UAS program. HPD's success with technology has been covered by news agencies both locally and nationally. Sgt. Mastroianni is also part of the HPD Media Relations Unit and is a gang instructor at the police academy. Outside of his time in Law Enforcement, Sgt. Mastroianni served 20 years and retired honorably from United States Air Force.
